LADIES' COLUMN.

Lenten Seclusion the Chrysalis Stage in the Evolution of Spring Butterflies.

Flowers, Ribbons, Metal Adornings, Dresses Designed and Described.

Women With a Head for Figures and Not Figure Heads--Notes and Receipts.

The early Fathers of the church were wise in ordering their children to abstain from the enticing gayeties of earth for a time, and the time was well chosen. What so fitting for penitential service as the last of winter and the first of spring? Exhausted by holiday dissipation and that of the month succeeding, rest is eminently necessary; the first glimpse of the gorgeous array makes it far easier to go clad in sack cloth and repent in the chrysalis state until gentle spring zephyrs and the reviving rays of the sun bring to life gay butterflies, who flaunt bright colors in his glittering beams.

Little patience, for women well know there is a quiet process going on that will result in the gratification of their love of beautiful dress--a love that needs no apology, only caution, that it does not become a passion and provoke idolatry. To dress well is one of the few requirements of life where duty and pleasure go hand in hand, and cruel would be the spirit that would seek to divorce them!

On the whole, the present era is a fortunate one, and those who desire to dress becomingly need not sigh for good old times, for the good of old-time fashion is appreciated and made a part of prevailing modes. The process likely is that of annexation and does not relegate good clothes to utter oblivion, but so plans that pretty addition can be made to last year's gown and yet it may possess that indescribable quality which all women recognize as stylishness, and also give to feminine toilets of to-day that infinite variety which is so charming. Especially is this true of hats, for while the old shapes are not abandoned, there is a steady addition of new shapes. Large hats and small hats, close fitting capotes and directorio bonnets; some rising to a peak where full bloom roses may be tucked away, others pressed down close upon the V shaped base that shades the forehead. By a singular inconsistency flowers for spring wear are not confined to those that bloom in the spring, but stems of golden rod are freely mingled with dandelions, yellow flowers being in the ascendant; the fitness of things would suggest a selection from clusters of buttercups, garlands of trailing arbutus, pussy willow twigs and branches of apple and cherry trees, so perfectly imitating nature that one can almost discern the brightening of the bark as the sap ascends and feel almost sure a few days will develop the closed buds that show only a hint of color. At variance it would seem with all these floral hints is the use of gold and these two are inter-liberally with ribbons that are the artists' brain. Never before in the history of silk weaving have effects been so purely artistic.

One of the prettiest costumes for early wear is a nut brown cashmere with simple tunic drapery, and a sleeveless jacket opening very much in front. A wide pointed brown velvet sash outlines the long waist under the chemise of Sicilienne. The sleeves are made of this same material, hanging quite loose on the arm, terminating in a gold bordered velvet cuff, the collar being of the same. The hat has a wide brim in front. It is trimmed with a fascio of Sicilienne and loops of gold and brown ribbons.

A blonde looks charming in a suit of electric blue cloth over moire trimmed with new gold and silver braid, costed hat to match a dash of happy contrast given to the hat by a terracotta plume. The use of these metal braids requires a correct eye for effects. Unless these are observed artistically the result will be most disastrous and the wearer resemble a creature of tin and steel.

Many of the bodices in handsome spring toilets of silk, whether plain or combined with velvet, have galleon and passementerie trimming that is worn specially for the purpose, narrowing to the waist line, and are also used as borders to the Swiss girdle that is now so much worn. These girdles, or medieval belts, as they are sometimes termed, have a very graceful effect. Reaching considerably below the waist, they improve the figure rather than detract from it, as a tight belt is apt to do. The descending point of the girdle is made longer by two or three inches than the skirt, slightly draped in the back, giving the long sweeping effect at the side. This is worn over a killed skirt that is often finished at the bottom with a bias band of moire.

Ginghams and satens will be made rather plainly, but there is no limit put upon the use of ribbon in adorning their simplicity; loops, bows, plaids, ends and streamers may be piled upon them, of all widths from two to fourteen inches. Filled corsets for gowns of wash material is deemed most suitable, and a surprise effect is obtained by a fullness on the shoulders. Short waisted ladies generally prefer narrow, long vests and revers coming to a slender point at the waist line.

For the decorations of those who like to read of pretty things, we clip from a Washington letter the description of a distinguished English girl's dress at a recent reception in that city.

Miss Ferguson wore a walking-dress of black broadcloth, with close felt hat. The short jacket also of black broadcloth, was opened in front over a lowly as her vest of soft China-blue silk, lined at the waist with a belt of the same, held in place by a large, beautiful buckle of renaissance silver. From beneath which the vest extended again in a deep puff between this and the outer coat of broadcloth was a curious but most effective jacket of smooth gray fur, made perfectly plain in front and extending just to the belt line. Patent-leather ties, cut high, with black silk stockings, completed a costume which, though quiet, was at the same time strikingly original and effective.

A dress that, taken as a whole, meets every requirement of fitness and true refinement of taste.

fashionable gowns for balls and dancing parties.

The bustle grows smaller just below the waist.

Ivory faille, relieved with amber, is a popular color combination.

Moire silk and moire ribbons look best with white tulle.

The fashion of wearing lace very high up about the throat with dressy costumes is popular.

Draperies are arranged in long, softly flowing folds imitating the Greek in outline.

Spring satens are shown in large show patterns copied from India silks and foulards.

Sailor jerseys are brought out in easy loose forms and in all colors to wear with skirts of various kinds.

Four and a half yards of wide moire ribbon is required for the immense sashes now worn by fashionable girls.

Heavy ruffles will be worn around the edge of these dresses for traveling and country excursions.

Handsome black silk dresses are decorated with gold cord and narrow gold gimp, while gold buttons ornament the corsage.

Sheer white woolen toilets, made in semi-classic style, are very fashionable wear for evening and high teas.

Among new spring colors for millinery is "antique gold," a dull golden color without any of the greenish tint of old gold. It is very becoming to rosy-cheeked brunettes.

The enamel paint is employed to cover palest faces to be carried with evening costume. The enamel hardens them and they wear very well, and with the decoration of a ribbon bow they look well, whether ornamented with flowers or not.

Narrow baby ribbons are being made up in Paris into the "chiffonage" for the necks and wrists of dresses, where collar cuffs or white lace used to be worn. They are made of innumerable loops, all standing up, so that the effect is "gauzy."

Yoke bodices will appear again this season, not, however, those made with an unsightly straight seam across the chest and across the middle of the back, but finished off in sweeping curves and simulating very closely an ornamental low bodice or peasant's waist, supplemented at the top by a high bodice of silk or fancy materials.

La Paris plush is the favorite wear now for morning house-dresses, or even for walking dresses worn under a coat. It is so soft that it lends itself better than any other material to a costume for ease or work. Plush "matinees" are made with skirts deeply embroidered round the bottom in chenille, white or brown or gold or red. The bodice is a tight-fitting jacket entirely covered with the embroidery.

For informal gatherings in the evening, pretty silk and lace striped jerseys are much worn. Some are in alternate stripes of lace insertion and velvet or moire ribbon, others all of lace over a color, but the generally are white, pink, blue or bright red silk. Black ones of lace and jet stripes are worn by elderly as well as young ladies, and may be varied in effect by being worn over a colored silk underwaist.

Household.

Women of to-day are clamoring for rights vested and rights claimed, and like all clamor of the masses there is, amid much senseless din, a still small voice that utters words of truth and soberness. Women should, however, remember that in order to render rights apparent it is necessary that the claimant show a capacity for exercising them, and that so long as women are themselves content with ignorance on subjects pertinent to their claims it is hardly fair to expect concessions. A husband says: "What does a woman know about business?" A daughter says: "What does mother know about society?" and the wife and mother makes no answer. She knows of stocks, bonds and interest, and has vague memory that bankruptcy followed careless expenditures and resulted from a want of proper adjustment between income and outgo, and that as the dis-bouser of monies in the relation of wife she has endeavored to be governed by these principles of finance, but more vividly does she remember that she has never had such a knowledge of the income as would enable her to judge whether she was indulging in extravagance, and she wonders if marriage is a partnership or if she is indeed a dependent on the bounty, it may be of a generous husband or it may be of a niggard.

Her mistake lay in not insisting on a knowledge of the resources of the firm that she might regulate the expenditure of the household. It is a pretty sentimentality on the part of the husband that he will deny her nothing, and he is often a victim of his own softness; but manlier far is it to possess moral courage that shall enable him to make clear to the wife, his deepest, all his business, that she may intelligently proportion her disbursements; and manlier, far manlier, to give her liberty of action in the use of money, than to exact from her a strict account of funds placed in her hands, that are doled or freely given as his character may be. The vested right of wife to an entire knowledge of her husband's business is not urged upon men of despotic nature, but upon lavish husbands who, under guise of generosity, find a kind of selfish pleasure in making the wife dependent on their bounty.

Every mistress of a household needs to know how much can be safely used in the family, and be thoroughly apprised of any important contingency. To do this efficiently it is necessary that a wife impress her husband with her fitness for the trust she asks. This will never be, so long as she suffers herself to be engrossed with the petty cares of daily life. Too often is it the case that the most domestic of wives is least fitted from indifference to these things to become her husband's counselor. Her husband begins by treating her as a plaything and ends by classifying her with a sex that he disdainfully declares "knows nothing about business." His right is to insist that she shall know something about business, and then if storms come or death overtakes him ere his plans are matured, he will in the one case have in her a wise counselor, and in the other as the reins will fall from failing hands there will be an abiding faith that those he loves best and for whom he has striven will not be left without a guiding hand, and intrusts without fear to this wise woman the future of those he held so dear.

"I will make a helpmeet for him," was the language of the Great Designer, and a right established in creation should not be lightly esteemed by either man or woman; but upon the latter rests the responsibility of fitting herself for the position assigned. The duty of wife ought to be paramount, and a little thought on the part of those who have assumed this relation will easily serve to convince them that this includes self preparation in order to enter intelligently with her husband into all the spheres active life may call for him. Socially she must be his equal; morally his peer; intellectually his companion; financially his partner, and her place in his heart and in his life no one save himself can assign. Chuzzlevid indeed would be that husband who could to such a woman deny what she claims.

RECIPIES.
Muffins--One cup of milk, three eggs, small piece of butter, two teaspoons of baking powder, two cups of flour, one-half teaspoon of salt. Bake in muffin tins.

Cracker Fruit Pudding--Six crackers pounded fine, one quart boiling milk, one cup brown sugar, one spoonful flour, six eggs, raisins, currants and all kinds of spice. Bake one hour.

Chocolate Caramels--Take four ounces of chocolate, put in a saucepan with half ounce of butter, and melt over a low fire. Add a teaspoon of water and dissolve; then add three pounds of sugar, half a pint of cream and one small teaspoon of cream of tartar; stir slowly until it will crack; when done pour in buttered tins and mark in squares.

Creamed cabbage--Slice a head of cabbage, return to the saucepan with a pint of rich milk, one ounce of butter, pepper and salt to taste, let simmer five minutes. Pour over a cup of rich cream, in which mix a teaspoonful of flour, and serve.

Vienna Rolls--Melt a tablespoonful of butter, add to it one quart of flour, and two tablespoons of hop yeast, mix with the butter, take sweet milk to form dough, add a little salt; set to rise; when light roll thin, cut with a large cutter, fold each one over to form a half round, wetting a little between the folds to make them stick together; place on buttered pans, brush over with milk, and bake in a very hot oven.

Breakfast Bacon--First, cut the bacon thin, removing the outer rind; second, cut as many slices of bread as there are pieces of bacon, leaving the bread nearly an inch larger all around than each slice of bacon, and trimming off the hard crusts. (Reference to previous articles will show that bread trimmings are yielded as the bacon is nicely crisped, each slice with its bread is to be transferred to a hot dish and served.)

Bread omelet--Soak a cupful of bread in a cupful of milk, or enough to make it entirely soft; beat three eggs smooth, mix them with the soaked bread, season it palatably with salt and pepper; put over the fire a smooth frying pan containing a tablespoonful of butter, and when it is hot pour in the omelet; with a thin knife loosen the edges of the omelet as they harden from the sides of the pan, and run the knife beneath it to make sure it is not burning; shake the pan gently to keep the omelet loose, so that it can be readily turned out; when it is done, that is, as soon as it becomes firm enough to hold together, turn it out on a hot dish and serve it.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH DIAMOND BRAND PENNYROYAL PILLS

and a dish of cayenne. For those who like a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, an improvement. Now, add the chicken chopped fine, stir and mix until very hot, and when nearly cold mold in sausages or pear shaped croquettes; roll first in crumbs, then in beaten egg, again in the crumbs and fry in boiling drippings.

HEROES OF TEXAS.

Colonel Mathew Caldwell.
BY JAMES T. DESHIELDS.
(Copyrighted by Author.)
Colonel Mathew Caldwell, commonly known as "Old Paint," from the spotted color of his whiskers, came early from Kentucky, where he was born in 1798, to DeWitt's colony, and at once became a prominent defender of the frontier. He was in a fight with the Indians at the head of the San Marcos in the spring of 1835. He was a true soldier in the campaign of 1835-6, and served as a quartermaster part of the time. He was a signer of the Declaration of Independence, a captain in the regular army from 1838 to 1841, during which time he commanded one wing of the citizen volunteers as the famous battle of Palo Verde Creek, under General Houston and Burleson, Aug. 12, 1840. In 1841 he was a captain in the famous but ill-fated Santa Fe expedition under General Hugh McLeod, which was betrayed and captured near Santa Fe. Caldwell, with his companions, was imprisoned in the City of Mexico, where he remained about one year until released. He reached home in time to be elected colonel commanding the volunteer Texas collecting to repel Wall and his invaders, in September, 1842, and participated in the victory of Salado, Sept. 18, where 202 Texans put to flight 1400 Mexicans. His impetuous disposition is well expressed in the following letter from him on the occasion of the fight at Salado. He says: "September 17, 1842--At the Salado, two miles above the old crossing, we commenced fighting at 11 o'clock to-day. A hot fire was kept up until about an hour by sun, when the enemy retreated, bearing off their dead and wounded, which were many. We have a glorious band of Texas patriots, among whom only ten were wounded, and not one killed. The enemy are around me every side, but I fear them not. I will hold my position until I receive reinforcements. Come and help us. It is the most favorable opportunity I have seen. There are 1100 of the enemy. I can whip them on any ground without help, but cannot take any prisoners. Why don't you come? HARRIS FOR TEXAS!"

On the following day (the 18th) the main engagement was fought, which resulted in victory for the Texans, but as help failed to arrive in time, no prisoners could be taken, as predicted by the hero of Salado, "Old Paint."

Colonel Caldwell died at his old Gonzales home--one account says December 23, 1849, and another says in January, 1848--lamented as one of the noblest patriots of the country. Caldwell county was named for him.
George Wilkins Kendall, in his "Santa Fe Expedition," vol. 1, page 105, gives the following sketch of "Old Paint." "Cutting down the old man, the scribble of 'Old Paint,' from the fact of his naturally dark whiskers and beard being covered with large white spots. In Texas and some of our southern states, a horse, or other animal which is spotted is called a 'Paint.' The following writer he died, much regretted by all who knew him."

Syrup of Figs
Manufactured only by the California Fig Syrup Company, San Francisco, Cal., is nature's own true laxative.
